SWOS to break ground on classroom building

By RICHARD ALEXANDER
Navalog editor

The Surface Warfare Officers School Command (SWOSCOLCOM) will hold groundbreaking ceremonies Aug. 23 at 1 p.m. for its new $13.4 million Applied Instruction Building on Coasters' Harbor Island.

The guest speaker will be Vice Adm. Phillip M. Balisle, Commander, Naval Sea Systems Command.

Other speakers include Sen. Jack Reed, D-R.I.; Rear Adm. Rodney P. Rempt, President, Naval War College; Capt. Ronald W. Brinkley, Commanding Officer, SWOSCOLCOM; Capt. Ruth Cooper, Commanding Officer, Naval Station (NAVSTA) Newport; and City of Newport Mayor Richard Sardella.

Navy Band Northeast's ceremonial band will play.

The three-story, L-shaped, brick building will be built behind Arleigh Burke and Weakley Halls.

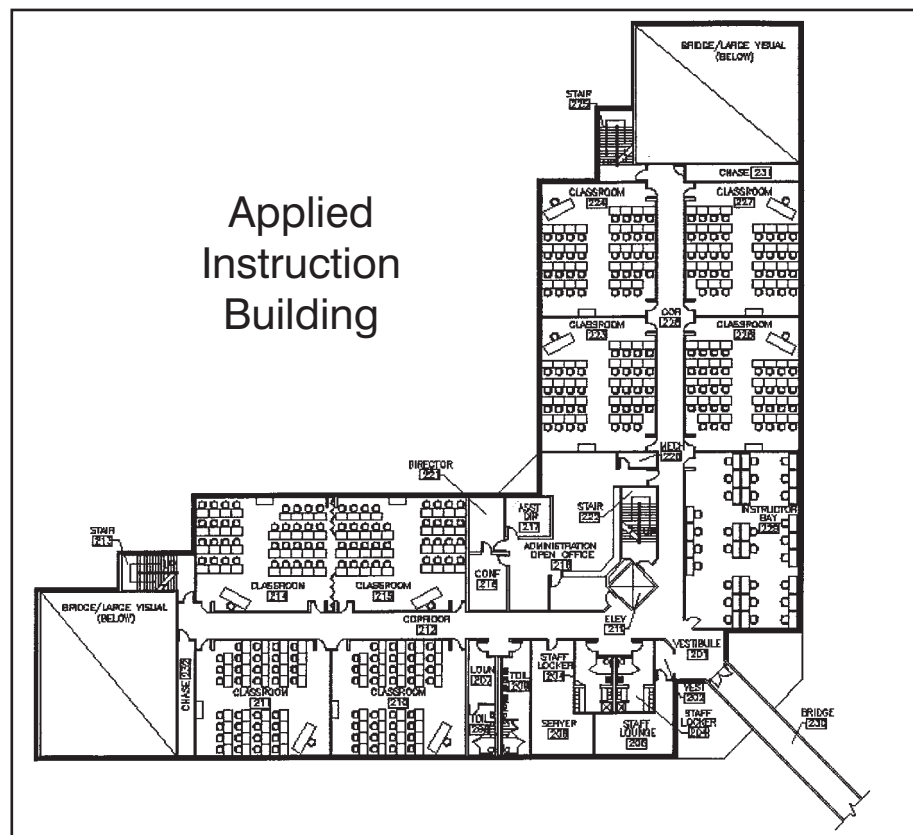

It will house classrooms and laboratories, bridge and combat information center (CIC) simulators, tactical trainers, a cafeteria, department staff offices, an instructor bay, administrative offices, plus staff and student lounges.

The main entrance will face the Northeast, and the second deck of the building will be connected to Weakley Hall with a long skywalk. Parking will be restricted during construction.

The general contractor is Triton-Marine Construction Corp. of Bremerton, Wash., who will subcontract for the building's design. The company's vice president, Jon Archer, will speak at the ceremonies.

Lt. Marcus Bickley, project information officer, said construction could get underway as early as September. When finished the 74,000 square foot building will accommodate the Division Officer School currently isolated from SWOSCOLCOM in Callaghan

'Stay Navy' team to visit NAVSTA

The Navy Personnel Command in Millington, Tenn., wants to get the word out to all Sailors that the Navy makes a great career.

The Center for Career Development (CCD) is sending a traveling team to help Naval Station Newport host its own Career Decision Fair, Aug. 20 through 22. Briefs will be held for all hands, junior enlisted through senior officer personnel.

The fair is dedicated to giving career information directly to junior Sailors and officers and to training Command Retention Teams. It provides Sailors and their families with support to make informed, unemotional career decisions and provides commands with resources and information to assist their retention efforts, and "Stay Navy."

The most effective tool brought is detailers from various ratings. Detailers—the career experts—will attend the fair and meet one-on-one with Sailors and their families.

Each Career Decision Fair begins with a brief to the area commanding officers, executive officers, command master chiefs and command career counselors on specific tools they can use to encourage Sailors to embrace a Navy career.

All Sailors and Officers will have a chance to attend a Career Information workshop. Each workshop targets a different audience, including junior enlisted, senior supervisor (E-7 to E-9, CWO, LDO), junior officer and senior officer.

The workshop is an apples-to-apples comparison of Navy careers to civilian careers, and challenges many myths regarding compensation, relocations, and quality

Navy urged to help during drought watch

The Newport Water Division is requesting cooperation from its customers in Newport, Middletown and Portsmouth with water conservation during this season of peak demand.

Naval Station (NAVSTA) Newport receives its water from Newport, Joanne Galuska, Director of NAVSTA Public Works Engineering, said. Military members in housing are urged to help conserve, too.

The water supplies on Aquidneck Island are at 51 percent of capacity, and the drought watch status in the state continues per the R.I. Water Resources Board.

The water division is preparing to begin pumping from the mainland reservoirs to supplement the Aquidneck Island supply. "We are continuing to monitor the water demand with respect to available supply and rainfall totals," said Julia Forgue of the water division.

The following are some wise water use tips from the Rhode Island Water Works Association:

Top 10 Indoor tips

1. Periodically check toilets, faucets and shower heads for leaks, and fix them;
2. Use low flow faucet and shower aerators;
3. Use displacement dam in a non-low flow toilet;
4. Use your toilet when necessary, but avoid using it as a wastebasket;
5. Take shorter showers;
6. Run your clothes and dish washers at full load and use the conserve cycle;
7. Keep faucet off when washing dishes (or vegetables, etc.); by hand. Use a basin and use the water only for rinsing.
8. Keep water bottled in the refrigerator for drinking, instead of running the tap until the water becomes cold;
9. Shut off water when you brush your teeth;
10. Run garbage disposal only when necessary.

Keeping the Faith

Waging war can test our ethical standards

By CHAPLAIN J. FISHER
Deputy Director, Naval Chaplains School

Most of us military types like to think of ourselves as the "good-guys," the heroes in the "white hats" as the old westerns used to portray.

We take pride in our military in terms of following the rules of warfare, being compassionate and showing concern for world opinion. That's as it should be. We should aspire to be a shining example of democracy and human values.

Indeed, we should not apologize for being the leaders of the free world. But, how do the traditional ethics of our war-fighters hold up against the threats of asymmetric warfare?

The techniques of terrorists have called into question some of our most basic foundational concepts of "ethical warfare." In fact, our Commander-In-Chief, President Bush, recently raised the issue of whether we needed a new ethical paradigm in the war against terrorism.

The moral standard that our war-fighters have practiced in the past is commonly called "Just War Theory or Tradition." It is composed of two primary concerns: What are the reasons for which we would go to war and how should we behave in combat?

According to just war tradition, there are five reasons for which we would go to war: Just cause, proper authority, right intention, a reasonable chance of success, and a desired end-state proportional to the means used.

For instance, let us contrast the tragedy of Sept. 11 with the experience of the American spy plane "bumped" by the Chinese pilot last year. Why did we go to war in one case, but not the other?

In the case of 9/11 our homeland was attacked and our economy was adversely affected. This also impacted the stability of other nations (just cause). President Bush, with the approval of the House and Senate authorized action (declared by a proper authority). Our goal was not to decimate a country, but to remove a non-aligned hostile and capable organization (right intent). Progress toward our goals is being accomplished (reasonable success). Finally, the tools we are using, conventional arms, economic agreements and diplomacy are not large-scale retaliation (proportionality).

Would we have gone to war over the spy-plane event? I doubt it. Our homeland wasn't directly threatened, our economy wasn't impacted and going to war over the plane would have had an adverse effect on our allies. Even if our leaders authorized an action and our intent was correct (get our airplane back), there was probably no chance of reasonable success. The desired end-state (get the plane back) would not be proportional to the means used (start WWII with the Chinese).

"Just cause" isn't enough, however. To be truly ethical, we must also be concerned with how our combatants behave in war.

There are just three issues here: discrimination (who are legitimate targets?); proportionality (how much force is appropriate?); and responsibility (who is accountable?) This is the part where our "war

NJROTC cadets sharpen their leadership skills

By ENS. JENNIFER BERG
NAVSTA Public Affairs Staff

Graduation ceremonies were held this morning for 144 high school students enrolled in the Area Four Leadership and Sail Training Academy. Capt. Ronald Brinkley, Commanding Officer, Surface Warfare Officers School Command, was the guest speaker at ceremonies on Nimitz Field.

The students are in Naval Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps (NJROTC) programs at one of 44 high schools in the Northeast. They just completed two weeks at Naval Station (NAVSTA) Newport enrolled in an intense leadership and communication curriculum program, team-building exercises and physical readiness training to reinforce their school-based program during the academic school year.

The skills acquired enabled the cadets to return to their individual units ready to take on roles of greater responsibility.

The school-based program, funded primarily by the Department of the Navy (DoN), is led by one retired senior officer and one senior enlistee member.

Which students get the opportunity to attend the summer program? They are the top two cadets of each school, who will return as the next year's commanding and executive officers (COs/XOs). The cadets, ages 16 and 17, were taught by 24 staff members, also from various high schools.

The cadets' experience here was not meant to be a "boot camp" experience, rather to refine their knowledge and leadership experiences.

Cadet Valerie Rapier of Garfield High School in Akron, Ohio, has been selected to be XO for her unit next school year. The 17-year-old senior said the camp was a good experience.

When she arrived she expected everyone to be alike, but through leadership and team-building skills, she began to see each cadet differently. Each had something unique and special to contribute to the team. It was up to the leaders in the group to use each cadet's talent to make their unit the best it can be.

The cadets were divided into squads of 11 or 12, with three squads to a platoon and four platoons total. Cadets were not paired with another cadet from their own school.

Surrounded by complete strangers, the cadets were forced to bond quickly with their squad and platoon in order to be successful during their time here.

The program here included sail training, running the Navy's Physical Readiness Test (PRT), taking a solo sailing test, swim training, and experiencing the Buttercup Damage Control trainer.

"I would not pass up this experience," said Jessica Gronke, 16, from Brewster, N.Y., High School. "At school we just have the older cadets to look up to, but here we actually learn what leadership is suppose to be." Gronke is going back to her school as events coordinator.

While going through this experience, the cadets were forced to make a rack, many for the first time. Some had never sat down for a family dinner.

They now will return to their respective high schools next fall with more confidence and better leadership skills than they even realize.

For these cadets, it was time well spent.

Standards

on terrorism” becomes complicated. Should we strike first at perceived or real threats? Traditionally, we have been willing to receive “the first punch,” but waiting could involve a horrific loss of life as we saw last September.

Should we enter other sovereign nations because our (often fallible) intelligence community targets a threat there?

Should we be more discriminate? What happens when a wedding party or legitimate company is bombed and destroyed? Will somebody be held accountable for mistakes? How will we know? With new technology and stealth operations being approved, what level of force will be appropriate?

What methods and weapons are appropriate for our national goals and democratic ideals?

The new age of warfare and weaponry isn’t so simple anymore. Unlike previous generations, who often fought their enemies face-to-face and in large numbers, warfare today is computerized, sanitized and far away from most of us.

For those assigned to special units, warfare is meant to become quick, effective and flexible. In both cases, it seems that the rule is becoming, “Make it quick, don’t think about it, and don’t look back.”

But, there is always a price to pay when it comes to warfare and killing an enemy. What happens to our soul? What happens to the human spirit? What are the consequences for our nation and citizenry? How will this impact our leadership among our allies and neutral nations?

It is time to begin considering the answers.

Hall on Coddington Point. Bickley said enrollment in SWOSDOC classes in Newport has grown to 1,100 per year since the command closed its school in Coronado, Calif., in 1994. Currently, five to six SWOSDOC classes pass through Newport each year, with up to 200 per class. However, SWOS next year will streamline its program from six months to six weeks or less. Funding for the building was included in the $10.5 billion Military Construction Appropriations Act for fiscal 2002. The bill passed the House and Senate last fall.

New chiefs prepared for leadership roles

WASHINGTON (NNS) — The Navy has selected 4,912 new chief petty officers, keeping its promise to maintain healthy promotion opportunity for top-performing Sailors.

Overall opportunity was 27.29 percent and this was the first time in many years that every rating had a promotion opportunity above 10 percent. Hard-charging E-6s who earned an early promote (EP) on their evaluation were selected at 36.61 percent.

Sailors in the Sailorization process were selected above the norm: those with recruiting experience were selected at 27.47 percent; those with experience as a recruit division commander (RDC) were selected at 39.39 percent; and Sailors who have served as instructors had a 30.73 percent chance of being promoted.

Notably, 452 of 2,552 Sailors with 19 or more years of service were selected at a 17.71 percent rate, bringing even more experience and leadership to the CPO mess.

CPO and petty Officer courses now online

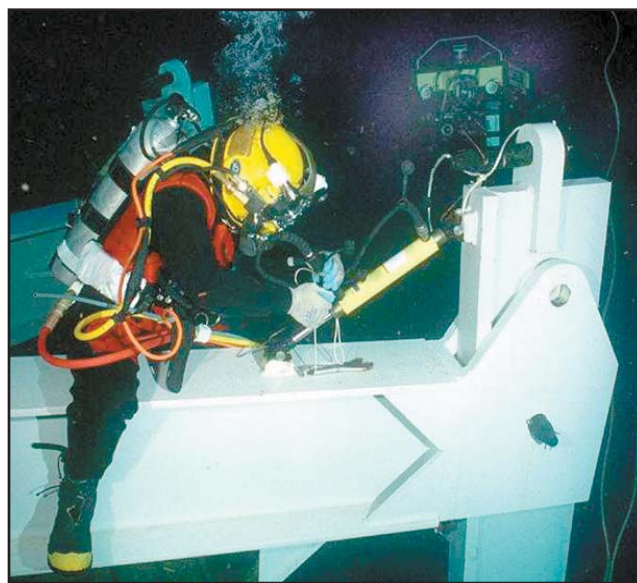

PENSACOLA, Fla. (NNS) — This fall, Navy commands worldwide will be teaching indoctrination classes for their newest petty officers and chief petty officers.

These courses are a critical part of a Sailor's professional development and teach topics in military history, leadership and communication.

Petty officer indoctrination courses offer a number of topics for new leaders. In addition to basic leadership, new petty officers will discuss values, discipline and Navy standards. The course was developed to educate Sailors in a variety of leadership-related subjects that will help build a foundation for future self-development.

Chief petty officer (CPO) selects will also be going through indoctrination courses. In addition to the nine topics already included in the CPO indoctrination course, two others have been added. The supplemental lessons focus on career management, and manpower and personnel distribution.

The most recent versions of the petty officer and CPO indoctrination courses are currently being distributed to all naval commands on compact disk

RAISING THE MONITOR — Hull Technician First Class John Coffelt works on hydraulic equipment that was used to raise the 120-ton turret of the Union ironclad Monitor off the coast of Cape Hatteras, N.C., on Monday. The Civil War vessel sank in a storm in 1862, and 12 men were lost. Navy divers were instrumental in the NOAA salvage operation.

Hyperbaric chambers sent to mine rescue

SOMERSET, Pa. (NNS) — If there is a moral to the story of the recent rescue of nine miners trapped 240 feet underground in Pennsylvania, Capt. Dale Mole' says it's that Navy medicine is "steaming to assist."

Last Thursday morning, Mole, the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery's director of undersea medicine, had been following the drama of the trapped miners when a high-priority e-mail flashed on his computer.

It was from Lt. Cmdr. Raul A. Velez, a naval reservist assigned to the Navy and Marine Corps Reserve Center Pittsburgh, near Somerset. Velez had been contacted by Lt. Cmdr. Nick Colovos, Medical Corps, a Naval Reservist who was also a member of the civilian Special Medical Response Team (SMRT) at the mine site.

His question: Does the Navy have a mobile decompression chamber that might be transported to the site to treat the miners once they were rescued?

Several telephone calls and a few hours later, nine Navy portable hyperbaric chambers from eight different commands were on the road, arriving in the open field with trucks and equipment at 10 p.m. With them were two Navy diving medical officers, Mole' and Capt. Henry Schwartz, Medical Corps, and 57 hospital corpsmen and divers, all with diving medicine skills.

Experiment 'Juliet' shaping Navy's future

SAN DIEGO (NNS) — Transforming the Navy. Force protection. Innovation and technology.

These are the concepts that surround Fleet Battle Experiment Juliet (FBE-J), the U.S. Navy's contribution to Millennium Challenge 2002, the largest and most advanced joint experiment of its kind to date.

With more than 4,000 Sailors and civilian personnel participating in FBE-J, the focus of the experiment is the co-evolution of doctrine, concepts and technology needed to move the Navy into the future of readiness.
